

CHALLENGE

How do we keep funding the ministries we already have going while also making room to explore what's next: new opportunities, new growth, new ways to equip and send our people?

THE TRADITIONAL MODEL

Most churches have traditionally solved this with a capital campaign. Here's how that usually works:

THE PROBLEM

When giving gets split into two buckets, the exciting new campaign can unintentionally pull resources away from general funding. The campaign succeeds: but everyday ministry takes a hit.

TWO BUCKETS CAN COMPETE FOR THE SAME GENEROSITY

MULTIPLY
A Sent People

For MULTIPLY Instead of splitting giving into separate buckets, everything flows into a single, unified fund that resources both our core ministries and what's next.

Here's how it works: the ministries essential to our mission get funded first. Then, as generosity grows, we're able to invest in what's next: equipping more volunteers, developing more leaders, sending more people out: without ever compromising the core. Every initiative we launch, every volunteer we train, every leader we raise up, every person we send out draws from that same, unified fund.

THE MISSION

The one-fund approach keeps our giving aligned with our whole mission, not just one piece of it: one mission, one vision, one fund.

This mission is about people:
equipping every person at Grace to discover their part in God's story and go live it out, every day, everywhere. We hope you'll chase it down with us.
